Through on-going partnerships with prestigious institutions worldwide, AKU brings international expertise to bear upon the establishment and enhancement of its current and future programmes and services. With a growing programme offering, in addition to our existing six campuses spread over three continents, we are planning three new faculties and six graduate schools to deliver a range of educational choices in an environment that respects cultural diversity.

Admission to the Aga Khan University Graduate School of Media and Communications is based on merit and potential for leadership. Merit is assessed by several criteria including scholastic achievements, performance on the AKU Admission Test and an interview.

GRADUATE SCHOOL OF MEDIA AND COMMUNICATIONS

The educational needs of media organisations today are broad ranging. They require relevant and transformational learning experiences that will empower stakeholders to reimagine the media ecosystem, locally and globally. Accordingly, industries are looking to universities to help find solutions that will support media viability into the future. Media are in this situation as a result of rapid globalization, changing economic conditions, the reshaping of political power and the emergence of new technologies, which are weakening journalism and media institutions, locally and globally. These trends are raising concerns about how to save journalism, sustain media businesses and ensure media institutions remain viable.

In response to these challenges and opportunities, the AKU Graduate School of Media and Communications has developed the Master of Arts in Digital journalism (MADJ). The Aga Khan University, Graduate School of Media and Communications (GSMC) is located at Aga Khan University - 4th floor on 3rd Parklands Avenue off Limuru Road in Nairobi, Kenya.
