Programme Highlights

The course will provide you with an opportunity to:

- identify the need for listening effectively;
- recognise the barriers to effective listening;
- demonstrate an awareness and understanding of the three language sub-skills and how they contribute to the development of effective listening skills;
- address the need for active listening in the classroom (s), workplace and day- to- day life; and
- identify activities and strategies that could be used for independent self-development.

Programme Facilitators

Ms/ Dr. (IP) Mirat al Fatima Ahsan is an Assistant Professor at the Aga Khan University Institute for Educational Development. She has more than fifteen years of experience in working as a National and International English language specialist and as a teacher educator. She has a number of publications on the teaching of writing, E-learning and teacher thinking and development. Her ongoing doctorate from the University of Oxford, her MPhil in Educational Research (Cambridge University), her MA in ESP (Warwick University) and MA in English Literature (Karachi University) have all reinforced Ms Ahsan's hold on one truth: 'to teach is to grow'.

Ms Aniqah Shah is a Teaching Associate at the Aga Khan University Institute for Educational Development. She also teaches English language and Communication Skills courses to undergraduate students at Bahria and Karachi University as a visiting faculty member. Her qualifications as a Master in Public Administration, a Master in English Literature (gold medalist) and a BED in English coupled with the experience of over eight years of teaching at various levels, from elementary to undergraduate, makes her a well-rounded expert in issues related to communication and the teaching and learning of English language.
